From the Denver News. A few weeks since there came to this city a quiet, demure looking woman, who applied for board in a private family, stating that she was a dress maker in search of employment. Notwithstanding the demure expression of her countenance and an air of sadness which pervaded it, there was a roguish twinkle in her eye, which betokened a spirit not entirely averse to the enjoyments of life. But in her manner and deportment there was nothing indicating that she could be anything else than the sadhearted little woman she pretended to be. And it is not surprising that under these circumstances the lady found her way to the bachelor heart of a gentleman boarding in the family. He sympathized in her is. # Fatal Accident.

Friday night Samuel Beeler, partner in the lumber firm of A. S. Campbell & Co., of Stringtown, I. T., was run over and killed at Kiowa, I. T., by a freight train. He got on at Stringtown, and got off at Kiowa, where he has recently established a saw

He was under the influence of liquor and it is supposed he lay down on the track and the train following ran over him, cutting his body in two. His remains were brought to Stringtown on the next train. Mr. Beeler was a hard working, industrious man, but addicted to periodical sprees. He has lived in the Territory for the last five years and had a host of friends. He has no family or relatives. ## "ONLY A REPORTER."

Whenever a snow storm strikes the country, along these times, look out for a general refreshing dish of tall lying. Every newspaper man in the land will place himself in his arm chair as placidly as a sucking dove, and as he looks out at that beauiful snow that covers the dairies and so many lost opportunities, he straightway reclines back against the rim of the afore said chair, which is already higher than his head, and begins to think.

A reporter never thinks but at certain in tervals. Those intervals invariably occur at crises in his life or in Nature. A row with a boarding boss constitutes one, the first snow the other. But the reporter is a bad, yet necessary
